

Outage on old linux server

The old linux server (blueskyhost.COM) is currently experiencing some difficulties. This should only affect a very limited number of customers.

We're in the process of rebooting the machine and expect the problem to be resolved soon. We apologise for any inconvenience caused.

Customers who are still hosting services on this machine are encouraged to move them to the new server as soon as possible.

We've now decided that the machine will need to be completely disabled for several hours while we rebuild it.

Again we apologise for any inconvenience.

While most sites on this server are now back up and running, some users may still be experiencing problems receiving email. Unfortunately the people at the data centre ripped the server out without giving us the opportunity to take a full system dump of all our settings, so we are having to reconfigure many of them manually. Please bare with us and rest assured that we are doing our best to fix these problems as quickly as possible.

Email configurations are complete so please email us at support@blueskyhost.com if you are still experiencing any difficulties.
